Student Congress at UM

Collegians to Hear Leary

More than a thousand college students from across the nation will hear a roster of prominent speakers during the two-week National Student Congress beginning next Sunday on the College Park campus of the University of Maryland.

On Thursday, Dr. Timothy Leary, high priest of the LSD cult, and Dr. Sidney Cohen will participate in a symposium entitled, "Drugs: A Debate."

"The Arrogance of Omnipresence — The Overextension of American Foreign Policy," will be the title of an address by John Kenneth Galbraith, next Saturday.

ASSISTANT Secretary of State William Bundy and former Presidential assistant Richard Goodwin, on Tuesday, will conduct the seminar, "The Path to Vietnam: A Lesson in Involvement."

The intriguing, often obscure, symposium on "Alternatives to the Liberal Consensus," and leading educators are scheduled to discuss, "The Crisis in the University."

The congress, sponsored by the National Student Association, opens at 4 P. M. with an address by Maryland Sen. Daniel Brewster.

Participating in that discussion will be Robert Armory Jr., former CIA deputy director; Michael Wood, former National Security Agency staffer now with the National Conference for a New Politics, who broke the story of CIA student involvement to Ramparts magazine; Sol Stern, assistant managing editor of Ramparts, and Carey McWilliams Jr., professor of government, Oberlin College.

Congressman Donald Rumsfeld (R., Ill.); Marcus Raskin of the Institute for Policy Studies; Paul Booth, past national secretary of Students for a Democratic Society, and Curtis Gans, of Americans for Democratic Action, will center a
